THE JOURNALIST

Union Square Edition

Be A Journalist, Not A Tourist.

There are two types of people in the world. There is the outsider, and there is the other. As The Journalist your job is to be the outsider. Your job is to observe the tourists in the space, masquerade your stance as an outsider, and seemingly try to fit in. While you're sitting in the rain, taking notes, snapping photos of strangers, you'll come to realize that it's better to be a Journalist than it is to be a tourist.

Go Out & Interview Someone

As a journalist, you will use your notebook to make daily 45 minute observations. These observations will consist of you going out to Union Square, and sitting down for 45 minutes. You must be alone. Through these observations, a story will most likely construct itself among your encounters with tourists, locals, and animals.

One Hundred Photos

With the disposable camera in your kit, you can construct a gallery of photos taken of people at Union Square. For the best results, The Journalist usually pretends to be taking a photo of something else when snapping a photo of someone. A good lookout position is The Starbucks at The Macy's. It is here where you can get an overhead view of Union Square, and the people within it. You can also try sitting at one of the benches. For best result, do this when it is raining.

The hardest and most rewarding thing you can do is to find someone who you can interview. First you're going to want to create some questions. Make each question relevant to the person you find. If it's a shopper, simply ask "what's in your bag". Make it something interesting. The first question will evoke or revoke the Interviewees interest.
